Not illustrated. 1888 Excerpt: . of ideas to carry about in your memory you should choose a house and place the first idea in the hall, the second in the parlour, one idea at each window, another beside each statue, and so on. On mentally going through the house the ideas recall the objects and the objects the ideas. Another device has been to put things difficult to be remembered into rhymes which are words rendered easy to recall by associations of sound. The man who put in rhyme the number of days in each month deserves to have a monument erected to his memory. In spite of all the boasts of success of teachers of mnemonics, to the best of our knowledge it has been very little used. Perhaps those who have tried it have expected too much; for, like every other art, it has its limitations. Such artificial aids to memory may be very useful in remembering some facts, but when one tries by their aid to recollect a great many facts, the different associations must cross and confuse one another. People sometimes say, for example, when they promise not to forget a thing, I shall tie a string round my finger in order to make me remember it, and this might do very well to recall one thing; but suppose a person had so many things to recall that he tied a string round each finger, and then one round each toe, it is doubtful whether the...
