The first was that I could not, the second that I would not; no, not till you should be free from your Royal guests. As I hear they are to be with you next week, I am humble enough to be content to succeed them; and so, as Bishop Burnet says, if you will accept of me any day after Monday sennight the 26th, I am at your commands, provided it is not too near your embarkation, and that I shall not interrupt your packing up. Do not make any ceremony with me, but tell me freely if so late a visit will be inconvenient. I can come, you know, next summer, as I suppose the King of Ireland...
